Xiomaro, the Roslyn Heights-based artist known for his artistic renditions of American history, continues to have his photography displayed in exhibits in a variety of places.

As spring has finally arrived, Xiomaro is offering a "Roadside Bouquet" of photography, all from scenes along Long Island's Wine Country.

The photographs are available on Xiomaro's website at www.Xiomaro.com. They are also are part of regular fundraisers that the artist promotes. For the Roadside Boutique, Xiomaro said that one discounted Special Edition Print would be offered for each month of the 2014 calendar year.

"Sales will fund my efforts to promote the appreciation, visitation and conservation of public spaces through exhibits, publicity, talks, interactions with legislators and outreach to communities that do not traditionally frequent national parks and historical sites," he said. "Purchase all 12 photographs during the calendar year and receive a free presentation folio for elegantly storing your prints."

Back on Long Island, Xiomaro's recent photography is on display with five photographs from William Floyd's "House of Revolution" and one photograph from Theodore Roosevelt's "How I Love Sagamore Hill" included in the exhibit, "Long Island at War."

This exhibit, at the Long Island Museum, 1200 Route 25A in Stony Brook, is the first major museum exhibit to consider the region's significant and continuing connections to each American war. The large-scale, 3,000 sq. ft. exhibit presents over 200 artifacts, paintings and photographs drawn from many prominent museum and private collections as well as an oral history component with videotaped interviews from Long Island veterans. It runs from May 23 to Dec. 28 of this year.

Xiomaro's artwork will appear in the exhibit's six sections on each of America's military engagements.

A talk and Q & A with Xiomaro on William Floyd's House of Revolution is scheduled for Sunday, Oct. 19, from 2 to 3:30 p.m. at the Museum's Gillespie Room in the Carriage Museum Building.
