

It's pronounced SEE-oh-MAH-ro

Xiomaro is an internationally exhibited artist and curator specializing in photographing National Parks and other iconic sites to raise public awareness of their history, culture, and natural beauty. His street photography and photojournalism document candid urban life in the United States, Greenland, and other nations as a record for future historians.

His collections commissioned by the National Park Service have been exhibited at numerous venues including Harvard University, Fraunces Tavern Museum, Long Island Museum, Morris Museum, and Fruitlands Museum. Galleries in the United States, Europe, and China have also exhibited Xiomaro's street photography and reportage. Publications such as The New York Times, the Boston Globe, Newsday, and Fine Art Connoisseur magazine have reported on his work and he has been interviewed on NPR (WLIW), News 12, CBS Eyewitness News, and ABC News. Other appearances include documentary episodes by PBS, Fox Nation, and the National Park Service.

Xiomaro's books include Street Photography of New York City (Sutton Publishing) and Weir Farm National Historic Site (Arcadia Publishing) with a foreword by Senator Joseph Lieberman. His writing and photography reflect his work as what he calls a "residentographer," embedding himself in the community over time to artistically document the environment and the spirit of its people. At times, he is even mistaken for a local.

Born in Crown Heights, Brooklyn, Xiomaro began as a musician. He graduated college as a philosophy major and was Editor-in-Chief of the Journal of International Law and Politics at New York University School of Law. Several stints as a corporate litigator led to a career as an entertainment attorney and artist manager representing hip hop, dance, and pop artists. After recovering from cancer, he found peace in the solitude of wandering with a camera and began pursuing photography as an art form. The career change was commemorated by adopting a pseudonym, Xiomaro, which literally means "ready for battle" and honors his roots in Puerto Rico, Cuba, Spain, and the Canary Islands.

Representation

HAZEGALL[Θ]RY

Haze Gallery

Project von I&D Media und Project Advisory GmbH

Torstrasse 177, D-10115 Berlin, Germany

Irina Rusinovich, CEO and Curator

Email | + 49 (0) 16098777620